Americans for the Arts Presents National Award for Community Arts Leadership to Texas Resident

WASHINGTON, D.C. —Americans for the Arts today presented the 2004 Selina Roberts Ottum Award to Lynn Barnett, executive director of the Abilene Cultural Affairs Council, at its annual meeting in Washington, DC. The award recognizes the achievements of an individual who has made a meaningful contribution to the arts through local arts leadership.

“Whether it be planning a sculpture exhibition or calling for more funding, Lynn’s work has enhanced her community’s appreciation for the arts. She has an eye for innovative projects both large and small, and Abilene is richer for it,” said Robert L. Lynch, president and CEO of Americans for the Arts. “She is a standout talent in the field of local arts leadership.”

Barnett, a native of Massachusetts, has been in her post at the Abilene Cultural Affairs Council for 24 years where she leads a vibrant arts community. The Council offers performances, educational programs, and arts funding opportunities for the West Texas city of 110,000 residents. As executive director, Barnett has established the Center for Contemporary Arts, a children’s theater series, an outdoor sculpture exhibit, and numerous other programs. She was recently honored for her contributions to the arts by the city of Abilene.

She previously worked for the Texas Commission on the Arts (TCA) as a grants program associate, and has also served as a panelist for the National Endowment for the Arts and the TCA.

Barnett received her B.A. from Smith College and a Master’s in Management and Human Relations from Abilene Christian University.
